

Ted Nelson is a philosopher and filmmaker who for the last 29 years has been designing interactive software for personal computers. Seeing the possibilities offered by computer screens, he has worked on the issues of non-sequential forms of writing for the interactive screen (which he dubbed "hypertext") and explorable presentations for the interactive screen (which he dubbed "hypermedia"). The New Republic has called him the successor to Buckminster Fuller.